

GOLD BULLION BREAKS NEW HIGHS LEAVING TIPS, GOLD MINERS AND SILVER BEHIND

Gold bullion reached a new high of US$2195/oz on 8 March 2024¹. The recent rally seems to have been driven by a sharp rise in speculative long positioning in gold futures markets. Data released on Friday 8 March 2024 (relating to Tuesday 5 March 2024) showed that speculative longs rose by 62,528 contracts (Figure 1), the highest weekly gain since February 2020. Meanwhile shorts remained broadly flat. Although, in absolute terms, the longs are still lower than they were back in January 2024, it is clear that there has been a notable reversal in institutional investors’ sentiment towards gold, at least in the futures market.

Gold outperforms TIPS again

Gold has historically moved in tandem with real rates (inversely), but that relationship has weakened in recent years. The most recent spike in gold has driven a deeper wedge between Treasury Inflation Protected Securities (TIPS) and gold (Figure 2). This underscores why analysing gold prices can not be done in a univariate fashion and our model approach to prices (using many different drivers – including treasury yields, inflation, speculative positioning and the US Dollar) best captures gold’s price behaviour².

Gold bullion outperforms gold miners

Gold bullion has also risen much more than gold miner equity prices (see Figure 3). Gold miners carry an equity market and a gold price beta. Global equity markets have been performing extremely well, with the MSCI World Net TR up 7.7% year-to-date and S&P 500 TR up 8.3% year-to-date, both greater than gold’s 5.0% rise over the same period³. However, the rise in equity markets has been somewhat narrow, with just a handful of stocks driving most of the performance. Gold miners unfortunately were not part of that club of outperformers.

Gold outperforms silver, but expect a catch-up

Gold has also outperformed silver and the gold to silver ratio is now more than 1.5 standard deviations about the average since 1990 (Figure 4). Silver is often thought of as a leveraged play on gold as the metal usually moves in a similar direction to gold, although often with a higher beta. We expect both gold and silver to end the year higher: gold at $2,210/oz⁴ and Silver at $26.01/oz⁵. We therefore believe that silver has more catch-up potential and the gold-silver ratio could moderate to 84 from closer to 90 at present.

Conclusion

Gold’s recent rally has been impressive and indicates an improved sentiment towards the metal. A natural question on investors’ minds, is what assets will rise on gold’s coattails? We believe silver has plenty of catch-up potential.
